Chapter 1 by Katelynn Johansen

A ugly witch that took over the world and ate all the food the earth and rubbed in to all the people that were starving but one day a young girl snuck out of the village that she was keeping us in and got food for every one. When the witch came back from making her stew she wondered what had happened to all the food. The witch ran to the village and was going to hurt the person who ever took all the food but she had to find them first. The first thing she did was poisoned everyone's food that she had made and killed them all so then she wouldn't have to find out who did it because they all eat the food. The End

Chapter 2 by R

The End??? The End!!

Excuse me, uh, Ms. Katelynn Johansen, but that is not the end! That's not even the beginning! That is strictly in the middle of the story, and deserves to be treated as such.

This is, I think, a bit more of that story.

Once upon a time there was a village, a strong little village, which had no crops of its own and decided that it would take a portion of the crops from the weaker villages nearby, instead of asking for seed.

A merchant caravan happened upon this village, and took up root there. It held many members, who were all eager to trade with the powerful and now wealthy village, but there was a young girl, the daughter of the head, who realized what the villagers had been doing.

This young girl wasn't exactly beautiful in the standards you would hold, Ms. Katelynn. I wouldn't call her ugly, but she was certainly plain. Her nose was too large and she walked kind of funny and her features were a tad bit too, well, foreign was the word they'd use in the village. She'd say Jewish. This girl was always far too blunt for her own good.

She stared at the people of the village, happy in their power, and revelling in their wealth, and slowly enough she hatched a plan.
